I think DOA plans to let the reporter know that they cannot speak for the tribes or coordinate interviews with them.

Right – I just thought the reporter may be able to get to tribal leaders separately.

Good morning, all. I wanted to give you a heads up about this request from Christian Science Monitor reporter Story Hinckley. Story wants to come down to NC (from Virginia) one day this week and speak with tribal leaders about "how the fight against the ACP is uniting East Coast tribes and what they have learned from Western tribes' fight again the Dakota Access pipeline."

Christy and Greg, I'm sending a calendar invite for a few minutes for us to talk at 2:30 this afternoon. I'm back-to-back until then.

Noelle, don't know if you're available at 2:30 or if you'd like to send me your thoughts before then by VM or e-mail.

Thanks, all!

Gena,

Thanks so much for getting back to me. I am looking to write a piece on Virginia and North Carolina tribes' pushback against the ACP. Specifically, I'd love to hear how the fight against the ACP is uniting East Coast tribes, and what they have learned from Western tribes' fight against the Dakota Access pipeline.

If possible, I would love to come down to North Carolina one day this week and speak with tribe leaders. I want to write a story that shares their perspective, thoughts, and struggles.

I look forward to hearing from you!

Best,

Story

Hello,

My name is Story Hinckley and I am a reporter with the Christian Science Monitor in Boston (although I am originally from Virginia!). I am interested in writing a piece on Native Americans' pushback against the Atlantic Coast Pipeline in North Carolina.

Is anyone available to speak with me for 10-15 minutes today on background?

I'd love to hear from you!

Best,

Story
